Subtle changes to player movements such as acceleration, speed, and turning allow players to control the ball better and aim their shots as the game gets underway. Head and neck collisions are now more realistic, with the responsiveness of players getting overpowered and tuned down. Dribbling is also sped up, allowing players to take more and longer touches on the ball to add more game-changing plays. The new engine also makes FIFA more comfortable to play with the redesigned kickoff, shots and ball physics, all of which make the game more intuitive for players to control. Additionally, more situational awareness has been added to the visual impact of player abilities – such as a defender catching up quickly to a forward out of control and tripping him to award the goal. FIFA 18 introduced motion-capture technology to immerse players and control gameplay, but FIFA 22 improves upon this with added benefits such as accessibility for beginners and improved control (with improved responsiveness), a clearer presentation of player abilities (with situational awareness), and more variations in player performance depending on the situational state of the game (such as a ball carrier being forced to step on it to create space or open up the final pass). The full-match gameplay will feature a new animation system that completes players' animations into distinct moments (like the jump, the tackle, and the pass) by means of motion capture and other data. This also creates more natural match transitions between gameplay and restart moments. For example, a player receiving a throw-in can run into the newly-created area, use the new acceleration and other player movement abilities to really create a new attack, and ultimately win the ball back. This change is already in the latest gameplay update; real-life players will feel the difference in their performance. This is a complete story change, so don't expect any changes to matchmaking. A new user interface lets you browse players and be able to preview them by watching highlights, access their skill rating, change teams, view their career and transfer history, and more. A new "Live Profile" feature lets you show off your best performance in-game. A new "Match Lens" feature adds statistics and context to your gameplay

experience by giving you detailed, customizable statistics that help you evaluate how a match is going. The match lens will show you goals, yellow/red cards, the current match state, the player in possession, and the current team that is attacking. You can also see a live video feed of the pitch
