While you don't need to be a Photoshop expert to learn it, it requires a certain level of technical knowledge and attention in order to make the most out of it. It could be said that Photoshop is like a secret language. In this article, we will show you some of the most common and commonly used features of Photoshop. Some we have become expert at, others, not so much. Borders, Frames and Corners Borders. You are probably familiar with them. They are the black lines that appear around all of the other layers. In Photoshop, as soon as you create a new layer, you have the option to draw a border around it. This makes the layer more visible and easier to click. The following picture shows the borders we will talk about below: This is called the white frame. You can use it to easily see which part of your image is your background, and which part is your foreground. [Best viewed in full-screen mode.] If you right click on the white frame, you can choose a color. You can also resize the border, change the thickness of the line, etc. You can make parts of your border transparent, and you can also add a border around the outside of the image (not available in Elements). The next picture shows the edges of the frame, which are called the corners. Notice the different ways to add a border on all the edges: There are two other types of frames: white and colored. Corner settings are another type of frame. They are also used to add borders to the corners: If you have a lot of edges in your image, you might want to hide them. For example, you can add a mask for these: [Best viewed in full-screen mode.] The image on the left is a mask. You can add frames to all the four sides, to either fill the frame or cover the whole layer. The following image shows a white frame on the left, and a full frame on the right: You can apply the same techniques to corners. Image tools and filters Clipping mask (F11). One of the most commonly used tools in Photoshop are the image tools. They are all available by pressing F8 or selecting Photoshop tools from the main menu. You can crop (erase part of the picture) or resize

Often enough, we're willing to look in a mirror, and see a depressed, angry, or preoccupied person. We listen to what others are saying, and take that in. But we don't have to do that. We can see what happens inside of our body. And we can follow that. We can notice our blood pressure and our heart rate. We can notice our body as we move around. We can notice the way our bones feel. We can notice how the wind feels in our hair. We can notice how our feet feel as we walk. We can notice the beat of our heart. When you do this, you notice things. You notice your mood, and then you notice how that affects what you think. Every time you notice what happens in your body, you're noticing something real. You're not just making something up. You're not making it up about the rest of the world, either. You're not faking what you see. You're seeing the world as it is. So if you notice that you're in a bad mood, and your thought then goes "I feel depressed," that's not just a thought. That's you noticing what's happening. That's you noticing a reality. The more you notice what's happening in your body, the more you'll notice how that makes you feel. And then you'll decide whether you want to do something about it, or not.

Search form Search Saving the Fittest Horses in the Show January 12, 2013 On December 27, 2013, while training at Santa Anita for the 2010 World Championship Steeplechase, my horse Le Pas Profond, (a horse born in 1998) died while performing at the $5 million Breeders' Cup World Thoroughbred Championships. Le Pas Profond (pronounced "El Pas Profond") was a beautifully athletic horse with great shoulders and hindquarters. He also had unique nostrils. In his saddles and dressage, he typically held his head up high and forward, looking down his nose. In exercise, he held his head down, which is characteristic of his breed. The nostrils were perhaps the most peculiar characteristics of Le Pas Profond. He had swollen nostrils and a very distinct keel, which is a cartilaginous projection on the inner nose, the bone that lies between the nostrils. This is a normal trait for this breed. Because of his unusual nostrils, many people thought Le Pas Profond's sire, Le Meleure, had an issue with his nostrils that ran in the family. This was initially my thought as well. For one, I had already lost a horse to colic shortly after taking ownership and the veterinarian had thought the cause was a gastrointestinal infection. Considering that, it is likely that his sire and my horse had an issue with their gastric system. From a logical standpoint, however, I had Le Meleure x Profond's dam, He Kepu, which was the sire of Profond x He Kepu, which was the dam of Le Meleure. Therefore, I could not explain why Le Meleure had a sire with swollen nostrils or why Profond had a dam with swollen nostrils. A day before Le Pas Profond's death, I received an email from a vet, who was one of my trainers at the American Equestrian Team National Training Center in New Jersey. The email stated that the horse that they had turned in to his equine hospital was a Quarter Horse. He did not list which species the horse was, but did provide a general location that the horse was from and the condition he was in. The vet then listed that the horse had a swollen nostril. While I was able to confirm that the horse had a
