CSS difference between table-cell and inline-block I'm trying to create a table with a maximum of 3 columns (thus 3 table cells). I use inline-block for the cells, but for some reason I cannot see the second, third and fourth column. See the image below for a screen capture of my code: If I switch from table-cell to inline-block the columns appear as expected, but I cannot find the HTML markup for specifying inline-block. Here's my code: table { max-width: 100%; } .container { width: 100%; } .class { display: table; width: 100%; } .class > div { display: table-cell; width: 25%; height: 100%; vertical-align: top; } .class > div:nth-child(1) { width: 100%; background-color: #FFFFFF; } .class > div:nth-child(2) { width: 100%; background-color: #C8C8C8; } .class > div:nth-child(3) { width: 100%; background-color: #0852C0; } Can somebody explain to me why I can't see the third and fourth columns, and how can I change

Internet-based social network of the Russian Federation.Q: Determining scale of a TIFF from a photo I'm fairly new to the world of using photos for print, so I apologize if this is a somewhat novice question. I take photos of my children's artwork, and I make PDFs out of them. All of them are sized using the "Rectangle Tool" on the ruler, and then I crop them using Adobe Photoshop Elements. However, I'm struggling with the general "determining the scale of the print" part. The prints my printer makes will not be the same every time, and I have no idea what size to make them. So, I have a few questions: Is there a way to measure the scale of a photo using the ruler? Or is it better to just make several measurements and then estimate the scale? Can anyone explain to me how I should determine the scale to make a print, and how I should make it? Should I just make multiple PDFs of various scales and then use the ruler to ensure I make the right amount? Can anyone recommend a source that explains the process of how a print is made? I don't know how to make it, but I would like to make this a part of my process. Thanks for the help! I appreciate it! A: 1. Is there a way to measure the scale of a photo using the ruler? Or is it better to just make several measurements and then estimate the scale? Scale is measured by using pixel ratio which is linear. The pixel ratio is the number of pixels in 1 inch. eg. 4/3 inch is 1 inch of width per 3 inches of height. So usually, one has to divide the image by 1.3333 to get the width in inches and multiply by a constant integer to get the height in inches. 2. Can anyone explain to me how I should determine the scale to make a print, and how I should make it? Should I just make multiple PDFs of various scales and then
