To date, no controlled study has been performed investigating the efficacy of MR-guided laser therapy for chronic low back pain (LBP) and its possible mechanisms. To investigate the efficacy of MR-guided laser therapy for chronic LBP and its possible mechanisms. Sixty patients suffering from chronic LBP (>3 months) were enrolled. The bilateral L3 spinous process was selectively irradiated with energy of 632.8 nm. MR-guided laser therapy was performed in 20 (10th, 20th, and 30th) patients using a 0.5-T MR unit. Pain severity was assessed using the visual analog scale (VAS) for back pain, and the Roland Morris Disability Questionnaire (RMDQ) was used to assess functional disability. The change in pain severity and functional disability was compared pre- vs. post-treatment by using the paired t test. The VAS for back pain and the RMDQ scores decreased significantly (p <0.05).
